Robots and Computers in the Future

Technology is changing very fast, and in the future, robots and computers will probably do many things that we do today. This will bring both advantages and disadvantages for teenagers.

First of all, at school, computers can help students learn much better. For example, they can explain hard subjects in an easy way. However, if teens spend all day using technology in class, they might talk less with their friends and teachers, which is not good for their social skills.

Secondly, at home, having robots to clean or cook would be great. Teenagers would have more free time for homework or hobbies. On the other hand, not only will robots make life much easier, but also they might make young people a bit lazy because they will not learn basic things.

Finally, in terms of entertainment, technology gives teenagers access to many fun games and movies. But if they spend too much time on screens, they will stop doing sports outside.

In conclusion, I think robots and computers will be useful for teenagers, but they should be careful not to rely on them too much.
